Let's Start!

Give me good service please!

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about unlikely events or fairly certain conditions that will be fulfilled in present, past or future in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about customer relations.
- I can express disapproval or refusal using if.
- I can talk about real life situations using words like if and when in the present.

Ask your partner:

- Would you like to own a restaurant as an investment? Explain.
- What elements make a restaurant successful?

Let's Explore!

Bill foots the bill*!

* "To foot the bill" means to pay for everything.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Bill: So Vanessa, when will the industrial fridge be here?
- Vanessa: It's supposed to be here in fifteen minutes. When people are late, it makes my blood boil!
- Bill: Okay. Don't worry. What's the damage?
- Vanessa: It's expensive when you buy a known brand. It's $3,368.99.
- Bill: Good. If it's a reputable brand, it's fine. However, if this one keeps breaking down, I'll have to buy another before we find ourselves in this type of mess again. When does this lunch shift start?
- Vanessa: Noon. If Jim doesn't arrive with the fridge by 8:30, I'll have a word with him.
- Bill: How's everything else going aside from the fridge issue? It looks like the numbers are down in the last quarter. I hope I'm doing some troubleshooting here not damage control.
- Vanessa: It's a bit of both right now. I am really working on customer relations right now. The staff is improving. I told them if they won't be professional, they're done. If they won't heed my advice, they will be sorry!
- Bill: I caught wind of a story about a waitress undressing in the restaurant. If she hasn't been reprimanded, I'll have to insist you do that.
- Vanessa: Of course I spoke to her! She only took her socks off, but that was disturbing. God Bill, I've never heard you sound so definitive! But, yes, I said, "If you won't conduct yourself in a professional manner, you'll have to go." I am giving her a week, maybe two, to see if she can meet expectations.
- Bill: I'm glad you're on top of it Vanessa! I see you've changed the menu. It looks good. If there are other areas that need improving, now's the time to tell me. When I come back from the Maldives in the next couple of months, I'll check in again.
- Vanessa: Well, when I get feedback, the customers say we need a fresh coat of paint ...
- Bill: Sure, but what about you? Do you need anything from me? ... like a raise? Let's say 10%?
- Vanessa: I could hug you!

Let's Practice!

Bill and Vanessa control their employees' inappropriate behavior!

Instructions: Read the dialogue and circle all the disapproval or refusal sentences.

- Bill: I hope I'm doing some troubleshooting here and not damage control.
- Vanessa: It's a bit of both right now. I am really working on customer relations right now. The staff is improving. I told them if they won't be professional, they're done. If they won't heed my advice, they will be sorry!
- Bill: I caught wind of a story about a waitress undressing in the restaurant. If she hasn't been reprimanded, I'll have to insist you do that.
- Vanessa: Of course I spoke to her! She only took her socks off, but that was disturbing. God Bill, I've never heard you sound so definitive! But, yes, I said "if you won't conduct yourself in a professional manner, you'll have to go." I am giving her a week, maybe two, to see if she can meet expectations.

Let's Practice!

Vanessa is working on improving customer relations. Here are her keywords to success!

Instructions: Complete the word search with the hints you are given.

Learning Points

Will/Won't in the if Clause

You use the first conditional to talk about possibilities in the present or future - things which might happen. You use the if clause with Will and Won't to express refusal or disapproval.

You can use Will and Won't with an if clause to focus on the result of the condition rather than a future outcome or possible event. In this case, the use of will does not refer to the future.

Will can be used with an if clause to suggest disapproval.

Example:

If you will keep on being unprofessional, it's no wonder you have so many problems with our customers. = If you insist ...

Won't can be used with an if clause to suggest refusal.

Example:

If you won't conduct yourself in a professional manner, you'll have to go. = If you refuse ...

Examples:

- If they won't be professional, they're done.
- If they won't heed my advice, they will be sorry!
- If you won't conduct yourself in a professional manner, you'll have to go.

Learning Points

Present Real Conditional: If and When to Talk about Real Life Situations

You use the Present Real Conditional to talk about things you normally do in real-life situations.

You use both if and when in the Present Real Conditional.

If suggests that something happens less frequently.

For example:

If there are other areas that need improving, I usually like to hear from my staff about it.

When suggests that something happens regularly.

For example:

When I have a day off from work, I like to go to the mall.

Notice the structure of this type of conditional:

If / When ... Simple Present ... , ... Simple Present ...

Examples:

- If it's a reputable brand, it's fine.
- It's expensive when you buy a known brand.
- When I get feedback, the customers say we need a fresh coat of paint.
