Let's Start!

Making a big change!

Learning Outcome

Describe emotions and feelings in present and past situations in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- What foods could you cut out of your diet to make it healthier?
- How difficult is it for you to make changes to your diet?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about beliefs and opinions and use colloquial expressions.
- I can talk about the results of an action or an event.
- I can write about unlikely or impossible situations in the present or in the future.

Let's Explore!

Peter is going to take the plunge

* "To take the plunge" means to try to do something that is challenging or frightening.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Vanessa: Hello?

Peter: Hi Vanessa. I've decided to do it.

Vanessa: Do what?

Peter: We were talking about the dangers of eating too much fat and sugar, and, as a result, I've decided to do a cleanse.

Vanessa: That's great Peter.

Peter: Problem is that I don't really know how. If I cut out all those things, what do I eat? I removed all the sugar, fat, meat and dairy from my kitchen with the result that there's nothing left except a few spices. If I had to live on what's in the fridge now, I would waste away to nothing.

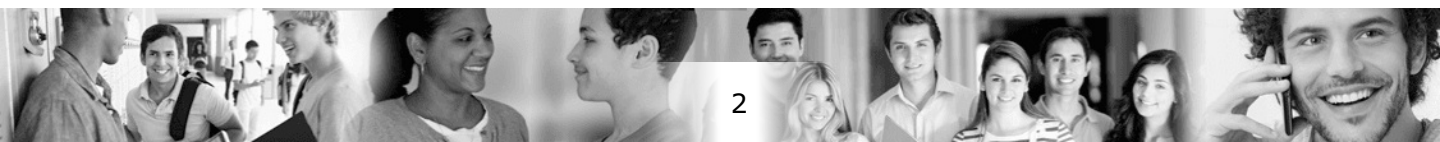

Vanessa: Well, lucky for you, I'm a chef. Therefore, I can help you with some meals that you can throw together that don't have any of the ingredients that you are trying to avoid. Long ago I worked in a vegan restaurant, resulting in the creation of lots of recipes that you can use. If there were more demand, I would open a small vegan restaurant. It's healthy and delicious if you make it right.

Peter: Recipes? You mean I can't just buy the food ready-made? If I could cook, I would open my own restaurant.

Vanessa: It's not difficult. I'm going to e-mail you some recipes when I get home tonight. I'll send you some simple ones first. If I weren't so busy, I'd come and cook with you. A couple people are away this weekend and, as a result, I'm working all weekend.

Peter: That's okay. I'll have a look at them and see what I can do on my own. Maybe I'll ask Amy if she can help me. If I lost some weight, it would probably make her happy! She should support me in this!

Vanessa: I'm sure she will. But don't forget ... it's more about being healthy than getting thin.

Let's Practice!

Other Ways of Talking about Result

You can talk about results or consequences of something by using a result clause in your sentences.

There are several ways you can express a result. The following ways all use the word "result" in them, but they are used in different ways.

With these expressions, you should first provide the situation or action that led to the result, and then say what the result was after the expression.

Cause	Result
There was a devastating earthquake in India yesterday	and as a result , thousands of people died.
There was a devastating earthquake in India yesterday,	with the result that thousands of people died.
There was a devastating earthquake in India yesterday.	As a result , thousands of people died. If you want to begin a new sentence about the result, you can also use: Consequently Therefore Thus For this/that reason
There was a devastating earthquake in India yesterday,	resulting in the deaths of thousands of people. (Notice the use of the noun "death" here instead of the verb "died" as in the other sentences.)

Examples:

- We were talking about the dangers of eating too much fat and sugar and, as a result, I've decided to do a cleanse.
- I removed all the sugar, fat, meat and dairy from my kitchen with the result that there's nothing left except a few spices.
- Therefore, I can help you with some meals.
- Long ago I worked in a vegan restaurant, resulting in the creation of lots of recipes that you can use.
- A couple people are away this weekend and, as a result, I'm working all weekend.

Learning Points

Unlikely Conditional

You can use conditional sentences to talk about events or situations that are unreal in the present and unlikely in the future.

Depending on the context, you can express conditions that are not real or impossible in the present and not likely to happen in the future.

Since these situations are not real, you have to remember the truth of the situation to use the opposite form of the verb.

If I liked dogs, I would have a dog as a pet.

I would have a dog as a pet if I liked dogs.

(the truth in the present: I don't like dogs. I don't have a dog as a pet.)

If the president weren't so handsome, many women would not watch the news.

Many women would not watch the news if the president weren't so handsome.

(the truth in the present: The president is handsome. Many women watch the news.)

If I won a million dollars, I would travel around the world.

I would travel around the world if I won a million dollars.

(I think it is unlikely in the future that I will win a million dollars and travel around the world.)

The structure for this second conditional is:

If + simple past, would + base form of verb

...would + base form of verb + if + simple past

Examples:

- If I had to live on what's in the fridge now, I would waste away to nothing.
- If there were more demand, I would open a small vegan restaurant.
- If I could cook, I would open my own restaurant.
- If I weren't so busy, I'd come and cook with you.
- If I lost some weight, it would probably make her happy!
